

Called Together

Jesus calling the fishermen to leave their nets to fish for people has always been lifted as a call for evangelism. No matter what time or place, the message from pulpits has been the same: Be like those fishermen. Put aside what you are doing and hook more people for Jesus.

While we are all called to share the Good News of the excluded finding inclusion, the sick finding healing, and the poor finding riches, there's a part of this story that often gets ignored in favor of the captivating imagery of lapping waves, bobbing boats and Jesus standing on the shores of the Sea of Galilee with windswept hair. It's the part where we must truly unpack — and understand — why we're being asked to fish for people. Hint: It has nothing to do with growing the church numerically.

Before Jesus walked the shores recruiting followers, he had retreated to Capernaum after hearing about his cousin John's arrest. His choice of location wasn't by chance. He was there to fulfill what the prophet Isaiah had written centuries before about that being the region where "the people who sat in darkness have seen a great light." They don't even have the strength or courage anymore to "walk in darkness." The troubles and trials of life have paralyzed them. The rolling clouds of gloom have immobilized them. Perhaps you can understand how this can happen.

Today, across the globe, there are still people sitting in darkness, in need of the renewing and revealing light of Christ. When we remember this part of the "go fish for people" narrative, we start to understand on a deeper level what is being asked of our congregations. It is time to cast our holy nets of welcome wide and start helping those sitting in darkness to stand and start walking again.

Jesus is calling our name to put aside what we think is important, set aside our schedules, reprioritize our to-do lists, and reach out to others. For Jesus doesn't care about bolstering membership rolls or increasing pledge cards. He only cares to rescue those he sees sitting in darkness.

Merciful God, help us hear the all-to-familiar "fish for people" story with new ears. Help us see how we are called together to cast nets of hope and healing to those who are suffering losses, who are in despair, and who battle depression. May our Christ light shine into the darkness this day. In Jesus' name, we pray. Amen.

We sometimes ignore Your call to follow, hesitating to leave behind nets of habit and self-interest. Forgive us and shine your light upon us, that we may see Your beauty and walk in Your ways. Lift the burdens we carry, and teach us to live as your children. In Christ's name we pray. Amen.
